

In reference to Indiana banks wanting to be allowed to call my home in an attempt to sell me new products they have to offer. I signed up for the do not call list because I DO NOT WANT sales calls at my home. Period!! If the banks need to call me because I have a problem with my account or I need to be notified because of transactions I've placed, then those calls I expect to get. Ex, I applied for a loan at my credit union and they called back to confirm the transaction. But if its a sales call, I don't want them.

In my opinion, the reason they think they need to be able to make such sales calls is because I have paid no attention to the mail advertising they have sent to my mailbox. Personally I believe telemarketers are nothing more than parasites preying on those who cannot bring themselves to say no over the phone since their upbringing has taught them to be polite when speaking to people but in my opinion, its that expectation of politeness that the telemarketers prey upon.

No, do not allow my home to be invaded by calls from banks. It makes me very angry to get such calls and personally I don't enjoy berating the caller and informing them of the fact that in thier current employment, they are nothing more than parasites and when they finally realize such employment is in direct conflict with thier upbringing and everything they have been taught as to what is right and wrong, when that day comes, that I hope they find a real job they can be proud of and not ashamed of as they must be being a telemarketer.

In short, there is no misunderstanding that I don't want them to call me back, Ever!!

Thanks. Bob Plymire

P.s. I'd leave my email for a reply but that is another battle. The laws permitting the copy/theft of my email address to be traded without my permission by companies looking to bambard my email with their junk advertisements which, in the end costs ME money to have to look at them. Not knowing who you sell your lists to, I have to refrain from giving it to YOU also. I did leave you my mailing address though.

May you and yours have an excellent new year.

Bob
